FIFTEEN.

Dan Smith, who lives alone in a log hut up in the San Jacinto mountains all the year round, is the most genuine hunter and trapper in southern California. While other old time hunters have been all urged from the forest, the rocky fast-nesses of the mountains, or from lives of solitude and hardship, by the temptations of civilization or a thirst for riches in gold fields or silver mines, Dan has over 40 years been a trapper and a hunter. He could fill a volume with thrilling tales of adventure, and his observation of the habits and characteristics of the fieroest wild bessts and most dangerous reptiles we have in America would be an authority among naturalists. He has hunted all over Colorado, Nevada, Arizona and about half of California. He is diffident about telling of his adventures, but when to his wife as "Die kaiserin," as does warmed up he can entertain a listener for hours. He recently related a fight to the death that he saw years ago between a panther and a drove of wild hogs in the vicinity of what is now Caliente, in Kern county. Dan's language is followed as near as possible in the story telling:

"About 20 years ago, near's I ken rekellect, I was huntin on top of Blue mountain, in Kern county. I had killed a big buck and had just finished skinnin him when I heard the squealin of a drove of wild hogs. You ken bet I hung that buck in a tree just as quick as I could, for them critters is the pryenest things and the meanest ye ever saw. Why, if they get mad, they'll tackle anything. Well, I had just got my deer safe when I heard them a-comin, a-squeslin and a gruntin. "I had to hunt a safe place myself, for there was no use of sheetin one when there's maybe 40. If I killed one, I'd had to kill 'em all. They'd never leave long as one of them was alive. I throwed the gun strap over my shoulders and took to a good sized tree about 20 yards from where I hung the deer.

"Them hogs put in an appearance just as I got on a big limb, about 15 feet above the ground. They was led by two big boars, and there wuz 29 of 'em, all told." They smelled the blood and the deer, rooted up the leaves and ground with their long noses and tore around generally until they found the tree where the deer was fixes the words "her majesty" to "the bung. Just about this time I heard something jumpin from tree to tree on the lower side of the rise, and purty soon I saw the biggest painter I ever saw jump on to a limb uy a tree about seven or eight yards from the limb the deer hung on. "Them hogs hadn't yet winded the painter, and they kept up sich a racket squealin and gruntin that they hadn't heard him. The painter didn't see the hogs until he struck the last tree, when he wuz almost over them. He jest laid himself full length on the limb and watched them, all the time wavin his tail back and forth and showin his teeth. knowed he had to get thet meat while it was in the tree or hev the fight of his life for it if it got to the ground. After a bit the painter seemed to make up his mind, for he got his feet under him and squatted. I tell ye, stranger, that wuz a purty jump. That painter jest sailed through the air and landed plump on the fimb over the

"When the painter struck the limb, the hogs quit squealin and tearin around and formed themselves in a ring, with the body of the deer in the center above them. They began to foam at the mouth and snap their tusks. What a noise they made! They wuz the maddest and awfulest look-in animals I ever saw. All that time the Trains. No. Leaves Leaves Kansas the deer swing around the sinews with painter was trying to haul the deer up to which it was fastened to the limb would make it slip back. Purty soon the painter seemed to see the trouble, fur he grabbed the buck with one paw, while he reached down and bit the deer loose. There's where the palater made the biggest mistake of his life, fur he couldn't hold the deer when the fastenin's was cut, and in spite uv him it tore loose from his claws and fell right in the middle uv the drove 7 6:45 pm 3:55 pm 1:46 pm uv hogs. They jumped on it and tore it to pieces quickern I kin tell ye. The painter wuz so mad that he lost his judgment, or he wouldn't have done such a foolish thing as he did, fur he gave one snarl and wuz among the hogs in a second, knockin two uv 'em over as he landed. Then there was a fight. hogs quit the deer and went for the painter. Now he wuz down and then up. "Over went a hog ripped wide open here, while another got a wipe with that big paw that made him see stars, but the hogs wuzn't bile by no means. They rip ped and tore that painter fore and aft. They was a dozen long cuts on his sides and legs, and his body wuz covered with blood. Sich snarlin, screamln, squeal-in, rippin and tearin I never did sec. In less time than I ken teli it II uv them hogs waz fald out, and two or three more fur awhile. One hog made a lunge at the pointer's head and got caught by the throat by the painter, but thet waz his last act, for one my the boars drove his long tusks into the painter's belly and literally ripped him open from one end to the other, and in less than three seconds that painter was torn to pieces. The hogs took up the pieces, bones and all, and crunched and ground them until nothin could be seen uv the animal big enough to make a gun wad. Thet wuz a battle, sure. There was about 15 dead hoge and six or cight cut and hashed from shout to tail. I den't believe a single one escaped some injury, but the livin ones, whether wounded or not, jist kept tearing around till they cleaned up all thet was left uv the deer and the paint-

'I had set on thet limb and watched the fight until it wuz finished and never thought of my gun, and if I had I don't believe I would have used it, but now thet it wur over I knew I'd hev to kill the rest uv the hogs or stay in the tree all night, so I commenced on 'em and killed the last one uv 'era. After the first shot the livin ones surrounded my tree and tried to get at me, and they staid all night there till I keeled over the last one. After I had cleaned them out I started for home, and for the first time in a long while got there without any ment."- Exchange.

CALLS THE KING "MY BABY."

The Spanish Queen Uses Pet Names When Referring to Her Son.

Queen Christina of Spain is about the only monarch or royal personage in Europe who, when speaking of her children and relatives, does not consider it necessary to make use of their titles. Thus, when the Prince of Wales refers to his parent, he invariably uses the words "My mother, the queen," the latter words being somewhat superfluous, it would seem. His son he always speaks of as "My son, the Duke of York." The emperor of Austria refers also Emperor William. The king of Portugal is so anxious to prevent any undue familiarity that he usually pre-queen," and in the same way the wives of these respective royalties never speak of their husbands except as "the om-peror," "the king" or "the prince," as the facts may be. Queen Christina of Spain, however, is quite different in this respect. She invariably talks of her little 7-year-old boy as "el mino," as "my son," as "my baby" or when speaking in German as "mine bubi," the Viennese dialect for "my dear little boy." It diminishes nothing from the child's rank or grandeur to speak thus of him, but, on the contrary, contributes to increase the sympathy and the regard for this sensible and high bred widow and for her royal son, around whose fair, curly head are centered so many interests, both national and economic. - New York Recorder.

For a Game of Odd Sorts. Put into a bag several pieces of paper, on each of which is written one word, such as "seng," "story," "poem," "joke," and then pass it around to the company. Each draws one slip and must do what is written on it or pay a forfeit. All these things may be either original or repeated except, of course, the songs. Here are some good things to give out for redeeming forfeits in this or any other

1. Repeat a line and ask owner of forfeit to make one that will rhyme with

2. Laugh, cry, sing and whistle. 3. Put one hand where the other cannot touch it. 4. Stand with beels and back touching wall; then stoop without moving feet and pick up forfeit.

5. Place hands behind you and guess who touches them. 6. Tell your favorite musical instrument and then imitate the sound of it.

7. Give a name in geography and spell it backward. 8. Multiply your age by 29, not using pencil or paper.
